Beaumont Newhall: Early Life and Career

Beaumont Newhall was born in 1908 and developed an early fascination with photography, which eventually led to a lifelong dedication to the study and promotion of the medium. His academic background includes studies in history and art, which shaped his analytical approach to photographic history. Newhall's career began in earnest during the 1930s, a period when photography was still struggling to be recognized as a legitimate art form. He was instrumental in bridging the gap between photography as a technical process and photography as an artistic and cultural practice.

Educational Background and Initial Interests

Newhall's formal education included degrees in art history, which provided him with a strong foundation for his future work in photographic history. His interests extended beyond mere technical aspects, focusing on the cultural, artistic, and historical significance of photographs. This holistic approach distinguished him from other early photography historians who often concentrated solely on technological developments.

Early Positions and Curatorial Roles

One of Newhall's earliest professional roles was as a curator at the Museum of Modern Art (MoMA) in New York City. There, he was pivotal in establishing the photography department, which further legitimized the medium within the museum context. His curatorial work included organizing exhibitions that highlighted photography's artistic qualities and its historical importance, setting a precedent for future museum practices.

The Seminal Work: "The History of Photography"

Published initially in 1937, Beaumont Newhall's book "The History of Photography" remains one of the most comprehensive and authoritative texts on the subject. This work systematically traces the invention, technical advancements, and artistic developments of photography from the early 19th century through the modern era. The book has undergone several editions, each reflecting new research and expanding on the medium's evolution.

Structure and Content of the Book

The book is organized chronologically, beginning with the pioneering experiments of inventors such as Nicéphore Niépce, Louis Daguerre, and William Henry Fox Talbot. Newhall's narrative then explores the technical innovations, such as the development of the daguerreotype, calotype, and gelatin silver processes. Importantly, the book also discusses the aesthetic and cultural shifts brought about by photography, including its role in portraiture, documentary, and artistic expression.

Impact on Photography Historiography

"The History of Photography" set a new standard for photographic historiography by combining rigorous scholarship with accessible writing. Newhall's balanced treatment of both technical and artistic concerns influenced generations of historians, curators, and collectors. His work helped transition photography from a peripheral curiosity to a major subject within art history and cultural studies.

Newhall's Influence on Photographic Scholarship and Museums

Beyond his written contributions, Beaumont Newhall played a critical role in institutionalizing photography as an academic discipline and museum collection category. His curatorship at MoMA and advisory roles with other institutions helped secure photography's place in museums worldwide. Newhall also contributed to the development of photographic archives and scholarly resources that remain essential to researchers today.

Curatorial Philosophy and Exhibitions

Newhall's curatorial philosophy emphasized the importance of photography's dual nature as both an art form and a historical document. His exhibitions often showcased this duality by featuring works ranging from early scientific photographs to contemporary artistic prints. This approach broadened public and academic perceptions of photography, encouraging more nuanced appreciation and study.

Educational Contributions and Mentorship

Newhall was also deeply involved in education, teaching courses and mentoring emerging scholars and curators. His influence extended through lectures, essays, and collaborative projects that helped establish photography studies as a legitimate academic field. The networks he fostered contributed to the growth of photographic archives and scholarship worldwide.

beaumont newhall history of photography: The Contest of Meaning Richard Bolton, 1992-02-25 Photography's great success gives the impression that the major questions that have haunted the medium are now resolved. On the contrary, the most important questions about photography are just beginning to be asked. These fourteen essays, with over 200 illustrations, critically examine prevailing beliefs about the medium and suggest new ways to explain the history of photography. They are organized around the questions: What are the social consequences of aesthetic practice? How does photography construct sexual difference? How is photography used to promote class and national interests? What are the politics of photographic truth? The Contest of Meaning summarizes the challenges to traditional photographic history that have developed in the last decade out of a consciously political critique of photographic production. Contributions by a wide range of important Americans critics reexamine the complex—and often contradictory—roles of photography within society. Douglas Crimp, Christopher Phillips, Benjamin Buchloh, and Abigail Solomon Godeau examine the gradually developed exclusivity of art photography and describe the politics of canon formation throughout modernism. Catherine Lord, Deborah Bright, Sally Stein, and Jan Zita Grover examine the ways in which the female is configured as a subject, and explain how sexual difference is constructed across various registers of photographic representation. Carol Squiers, Esther Parada, and Richard Bolton clarify the ways in which photography serves as a form of mass communication, demonstrating in particular how photographic production is affected by the interests of the powerful patrons of communications. The three concluding essays, by Rosalind Krauss, Martha Rosler, and Allan Sekula, critically examine the concept of photographic truth by exploring the intentions informing various uses of objective images within society.

beaumont newhall history of photography: Photography and Its Origins Tanya Sheehan, Andres Zervigon, 2014-11-20 Recent decades have seen a flourishing interest in and speculation about the origins of photography. Spurred by rediscoveries of 'first' photographs and proclamations of photography's death in the digital age, scholars have been rethinking who and what invented the medium. Photography and Its Origins reflects on this interest in photography's beginnings by reframing it in critical and specifically historiographical terms. How and why do we write about the origins of the medium? Whom or what do we rely on to construct those narratives? What's at stake in choosing to tell stories of photography's genesis in one way or another? And what kind of work can those stories do? Edited by Tanya Sheehan and Andrés Mario Zervigón, this collection of 16 original essays, illustrated with 32 colour images, showcases prominent and emerging voices in the field of photography studies. beaumont newhall history of photography: Photography: History and Theory Jae Emerling, 2013-03-01 Photography: History and Theory introduces students to both the history of photography and critical theory. From its inception in the nineteenth century, photography has instigated a series of theoretical debates. In this new text, Jae Emerling therefore argues that the most insightful way to approach the histories of photography is to address simultaneously the key events of photographic history alongside the theoretical discourse that accompanied them. While the nineteenth century is discussed, the central focus of the text is on modern and contemporary photographic theory. Particular attention is paid to key thinkers, such as Baudelaire, Barthes and Sontag. In addition, the centrality of photography to contemporary art practice is addressed through the theoretical work of Allan Sekula, John Tagg, Rosalind Krauss, and Vilém Flusser. The text also includes readings of many canonical photographers and exhibitions including: Atget, Brassai, August Sander, Walker Evans, The Family of Man, Diane Arbus, Lee Friedlander, Cindy Sherman, Bernd and Hilla Becher, Sebastiao Salgado, Jeff Wall, and others. In addition, Emerling provides close readings of key passages from some major theoretical texts. These glosses come between the chapters and serve as a conceptual line that connects them. Glosses include: Roland Barthes, The Rhetoric of the Image (1964) Susan Sontag, Regarding the Pain of Others (2002) Michel Foucault on the archive (1969) Walter Benjamin, Little History of Photography (1931) Vilém Flusser, Towards a Philosophy of Photography (1983) A substantial glossary of critical terms and names, as well as an extensive bibliography, make this the ideal book for courses on the history and theory of photography.
